Subj: A MANUAL FOR PROGRAM EVALUATION AT NAVY FAMILY SERVICE CENTERS

Encl: (1) NPRDC TN 87-19

1. This manual was developed for distribution throughout the Navy Family Service Center (FSC) network as an aid to staff who will conduct annual need assessments and program reviews of Center activities. It is directed specifically to staff members with limited experience in systematic evaluation of social service programs and is intended to standardize procedures and instruments across sites so that FSC data can be aggregated at the program level.

2. In designing this standardized plan, earlier efforts by staff and volunteers who conducted independent assessments for several FSCs must be acknowledged. The results of those assessments provided a foundation upon which to build. The plan also owes much to the assistance and close cooperation of NMPC-66 staff.

3. This plan was developed after preliminary assessment of the needs of Navy members and their families using the 1985 Navy Support Services Survey. Results of that survey are reported in the Navy Personnel Research and Development Center Technical Report TR 86-14, which can be obtained from the Navy Personnel Research and Development Center, Code 623, San Diego, CA 92152-6800. Point of contact at the Center is Elyse W. Kerce, (619) 225-7768 or AUTOVON 933-7768.

ABSTRACT (Continue on reverse if necessary and identify by block number) This manual for Navy Family Service Centers provides guidelines and related questionnaires/interview protocols for systematic evaluation and assessment of needs for support services. Data collected under this plan will provide a more objective basis for tailoring the service system to the changing needs of Navy families at specific sites and facilitate effective use of resources. The plan employs a multiple-stakeholder approach, and seeks to relate utilization data to psychosocial and attitudinal indicators of readiness.

SUMMARY

Background

Over the past 5 years, the Navy Family Support Program has established a network of Family Service Centers providing support services for Navy personnel and their families around the world. Following this successful implementation of the Family Service Center concept, the program now enters a phase in which emphasis must be placed on evaluation of program effectiveness. Periodic reassessment is also necessary if Centers are to remain responsive to changing needs of their Navy clientele.

Problem

Although ongoing evaluation and needs assessment are acknowledged to be essential for effective services, resources do not currently provide for evaluation specialists within the Family Support Program. This means that local Family Service Center administrators and staff, with varying levels of expertise, will be responsible for implementing the evaluation process. However, the usefulness of evaluation data will be enhanced if consistency is maintained throughout the network so that data can be aggregated at the program level.

Objectives

The objectives of this document are as follows:

1. To present the underlying rationale for evaluation design and methods of this approach.
2. To provide standardized instruments for the collection of data from appropriate subpopulations.
3. To provide guidance for Family Service Center staff who will be conducting periodic evaluations/needs assessments.
4. To assure consistency throughout the Family Service Center network and across time.

The initial sections of this manual are intended to give an overview of the evaluation design and to indicate how the data collection instruments fit together. The instruments are presented in the third section, along with a synopsis of how each is to be implemented. This is followed by an implementation checklist, along with some notes on analysis directed to the person who will function as computer analyst. Codebooks for the instruments are included as Appendix A; Appendix B contains a list of some statistical software packages.

INTRODUCTION

This manual and the questionnaires accompanying it are the basic tools for implementing an information system to assist you and the Family Support Program in long-term planning and effective resource management. The objective of the plan outlined is twofold: to assess the needs of Navy personnel and their families, paying particular attention to patterns of change; and to provide an ongoing evaluation of program effectiveness. With those objectives in mind, the broad questions you will wish to answer are:

- What are the service needs of the population served at this location?
- Who are the users of the services now offered?
- How good is the fit between needs and services?
- How satisfied are recipients of the services?

Both its individual components and the total package can be adapted easily to the unique requirements of your Center. Additional items may be included in any of the instruments to reflect your special concerns or to evaluate a recent addition or innovation in your services. Some sources of data may be omitted or substituted where this seems indicated by situational constraints. In other words, there is a great deal of flexibility built into the system. At the same time, it is sufficiently structured to provide for ease of analysis and to allow policy-level aggregation of data from multiple sites.

Answers to the questions above will be obtained from representatives of "stakeholders groups," which have an interest in the provision of social services for Navy people. Tables 1 and 2 list the stakeholder groups and provide details about the subgroups in some categories.

Family Service Centers that make use of this total package will obtain information from both users and key informants. Key informant strategies are a valuable component of many needs assessment efforts because they supplement information obtained from current and potential users with information from professionals and leaders in close contact with that user population. Not only does such strategy widen the data base, but it also serves to directly involve people who can help increase awareness of the program.

APPROACH

There are two direct indicators of Family Service Center effectiveness. The first is the "fit" between the expressed needs of Navy personnel and their families and the services being provided. The second is the level of satisfaction reported by service users or by commands whose members use Center services.

In addition, certain indicators of psychosocial functioning can be valuable as indirect measures of effectiveness when they are combined with more direct ones. Since these indicators, or "proxy" variables, are affected by other factors, they are not pure measures and do not reflect a direct causal relationship. Taken as a group, however, such statistical measures reflect a successful adjustment to Navy life and an ability to cope with its particular stressors. The provision of services which aid personnel and their families in achieving a successful adjustment is inherent in Family Service Center (FSC) goals.

An important feature of this evaluation plan is the provision of multiple measures of each area of effectiveness. Figure 1 presents an overview of the evaluation design and illustrates the relationship between areas of concern and various measures. The overview is further elaborated with a list of contributing stakeholder groups that are data sources. Table 3 suggests the type of data collection instrument appropriate for each group.

Separate instruments have been designed for each stakeholder group. Among these are structured interview guides as well as self-administered questionnaires. Detailed suggestions and guidelines for using each instrument will be presented later in this manual.

You will notice that some items are repeated, with slightly different wording, on several of the instruments. The items help to compare various groups and allow you to determine if, for example, command officers and service providers see the same problems as predominant or if either agrees with the users of FSCs.

The information you acquire through the direct questions should be supplemented current user statistics, command records, and information sources. The statistics routinely compiled by the Family Service Center for its quarterly report will be the cornerstone of this portion of the evaluation. They will be supplemented by user statistics of other providers and records of various commands participating in the evaluation.

Table 4 summarizes some of the characteristics and benefits of the evaluation package. In the section which follows, individual instruments will be discussed in greater detail.

DATA COLLECTION INSTRUMENTS

SERVICE MEMBER QUESTIONNAIRE

Description

The questionnaire for collecting data from Navy personnel in your service area is designed to be self-administered and to provide maximum information within a single-sheet, machine-readable format (Figure 2). These characteristics ensure speedy access to result summaries with a minimum investment of resources in response coding.

The most critical aspect of getting good data from the questionnaire is the use of a random, representative sample of all personnel within your catchment area. Some hints on accomplishing this are provided in the steps below.

Although instructions to respondents are fully contained in the questionnaire itself, you will probably want to write a letter to accompany the questionnaire, in which you emphasize its purpose and solicit participation from the selected respondent.

Please note that there is a "special answer section" on the first side of the questionnaire, which is to be used for adding items that are specific to your Center. You may add up to 10 items. Each must be worded as a multiple-choice question with no more than five response options.

Information Provided by This Instrument

- A demographic profile of Navy personnel and families within your area.
- Relative need (importance) of services as perceived by service members.
- Utilization of services.
- Types and perceived seriousness of personal or family problems.
- A comparison of services thought important vis-a-vis problems encountered.
- Satisfaction with social services received.

Recommended Steps for Collecting Data

1. Prepare a list of the various commands in your area.
2. Decide if you want to survey all commands in your area or just some commands. This decision should be guided by (a) the resources available for this effort, and (b) similarities among commands. Because this instrument requires relatively little expense and effort, similarities among commands should have greater weight in this instance. You will want to include both shore and sea commands, if appropriate, as well as any commands with personnel characteristics which differ from other commands. Be sure that at least one command of each type is surveyed.

3. Next, decide if you want to collect information from all personnel in a selected command or from a "representative" (random) sample. Random samples can provide an adequate level of precision and are more economical. An appropriate number of individuals for such a sample usually ranges from approximately 400 to 800 individuals.

4. Solicit cooperation from the commands you want to survey and obtain computerized personnel lists. Determine the total member population. Divide that number by the required sample size to determine the "sampling interval." For example, if the sample size needed is 800 and the population is 20,000, then every 25th person listed will get the survey.

5. To ensure you select people at random, you must begin the selection of individuals by using a random number. If you need to include every 25th person, then the random number with which you begin is between 0 and 25. Put the numbers in a hat to select the first individual's list number, and count down 25 for each consecutive selection.

6. List your selected respondents and their mailing addresses.

7. Prepare a transmittal letter to accompany the questionnaire. State the date by which questionnaires must be returned.

8. If you are using additional items unique for your center, attach them to the questionnaires, add the cover letter, and mail to your selected respondents. IT IS ESSENTIAL THAT YOU ALSO INCLUDE A SELF-ADDRESSED, POSTAGE-PAID RETURN ENVELOPE.

9. It's a good idea to follow the questionnaire mailing with reminder postcards about a week later. The better your response rate, the more reliable your data will be.

10. After an optically scanned version of the member questionnaire has become available, you will be instructed where the questionnaires should be mailed, and return envelopes should be addressed accordingly. The questionnaires will be optically scanned by the contractor and the computerized results will be returned to you.

INSTRUCTIONS

YOUR SINCERE RESPONSES TO THE FOLLOWING QUESTIONS ARE NEEDED TO HELP FAMILY SERVICE CENTERS MEET YOUR NEEDS.

- DO NOT USE INK OR BALLPOINT PENS.
- BLACKEN THE BUBBLE COMPLETELY.
- MAKE NO STRAY MARKS.
- ERASE COMPLETELY ANY RESPONSE YOU WISH TO CHANGE.

PRIVACY ACT STATEMENT

This information is requested under the authority of 5 USC 301 regulations and will be used only for statistical studies which will aid the Family Support Program in its efforts to serve your needs. Failure to complete this questionnaire will not adversely affect you in any way. Your input is valuable to this effort.

In the next sections we would like you to tell us about the various types of services that you feel are needed by Navy members and their families, as well as about the problems you experience that are associated with Navy life. Indicate which services are most important to you, which services you have received, and how satisfied you were with the help you received.

Sample Letter to be Attached to Questionnaire
Mailed to Navy Personnel

Dear Service Member:

Your Family Service Center is committed to helping you obtain the support and services you need to improve quality of life for you and your family. The purpose of this survey is to ensure that the services you need the most are accessible to you and to determine if you are satisfied with the services you have received.

You have been randomly selected from among all Navy personnel in your command, and no other person can be substituted in your place. So, although your participation in the survey is voluntary, we urge you to take a few minutes to complete this questionnaire. The information you provide should reflect the opinions of both you and your family members. If you are married, you and your spouse should complete the questionnaire together. It will tell us which services are important to you, which services you now use, and something about the problems you face.

Your responses will remain confidential, and individuals will not be identified. To make your needs known, simply fill in the appropriate circles on the questionnaire and return it in the envelope provided no later than _____. Each item is important, so please make sure that you respond to each.

Family Service Centers have been established to benefit you and your family. Please take this opportunity to make your needs known: fill out your questionnaire today.

MILITARY PROVIDER QUESTIONNAIRE

At most locations, the military providers will constitute the second largest subsample. This group should include chaplains, ombudsmen, and representatives from the following agencies:

- Counseling and Assistance Center (CAAC)
- Housing Referral Office
- Branch Medical Psychiatric Unit
- Legal Counseling Office
- Family Advocacy Program
- Special services
- Fleet mental health

The above list may not cover all providers, and you can add providers as determined by your individual Centers.

Description

This instrument is also a self-administered, mailed questionnaire. However, it can be adapted to a telephone interview format quite easily. The mailed version will make fewer demands on personnel resources without any appreciable decrease in response rates. In this case, it is not anticipated that response rate would fall below an acceptable level because the content has relevance for the intended respondents.

The Provider Questionnaire consists of a number of multiple-choice items that can easily be coded. In general, the items require only that the respondent check the appropriate option or options.

Information Provided by the Provider Questionnaire

- Description of services, including waiting time, service units per month, etc.
- Referral patterns.
- Service recipient demographics.
- Perceptions of problems experienced by service member and/or dependents.
- Services needed by service members and families.

Recommended Steps for Collecting Data from Military Service Providers

1. Draw up a list of the military offices or agencies providing social services to service members and/or their families at your base.

2. You will probably want to include all professionals providing services; for example, all counselors at CAAC, all chaplains, and so forth. However, initial contact should be with the agency director (or equivalent) to solicit cooperation. Explain the purpose of research, and determine the number of professionals at each agency. If you plan to conduct telephone interviews, ask for a list of names and telephone numbers.

3. Prepare an introductory cover letter to accompany the mailed questionnaires.

4. Mail the required number of questionnaires to the agency director (or equivalent) for distribution to staff members, or call the names on your list to reserve an uninterrupted time for the telephone interview.

5. Code the collected data. Questionnaires can be preprinted with column numbers to facilitate coding. A codebook is provided in Appendix A.

CIVILIAN PROVIDER QUESTIONNAIRE

Most of you have compiled a relatively comprehensive list of civilian agencies for referral purposes. It should provide the basis for selecting respondents in this subsample. The list below gives some suggestions for types of providers you will wish to include, but specific selection depends upon the extent of civilian resources available at your location. Because agency names change from one location to another, you will need to depend upon your referral list and the local telephone directory for accurate agency designators. The telephone book can also be your source for selecting private practitioners.

Here are some categories you will want to include:

- United Way
- Social service and welfare departments; county and state
- Mental health agencies; community, county and state
- AA and ALANON
- Public health nursing services
- Women's centers
- Planned Parenthood
- Big Brothers
- Community youth centers
- State employment development office
- Head Start
- Programs associated with local colleges
- Church agencies, such as Catholic Family Services
- Council for Community Action
- Community hot line or crisis center
- Easter Seal Rehabilitation
- Mental health professionals in private practice
- Red Cross
- Navy Relief Society
- Counselors in private practice

Description

The questionnaire to be sent to civilian providers is very similar to the military provider instrument. Again, it is designed to be a mailed survey, although it is easily adapted to a telephone interview format. Response options for many items are identical for military and civilian service providers, but wording of the item stems may differ slightly. Matched items will then be coded in the same data columns to facilitate comparisons between groups or to allow responses for the groups to be aggregated for some analyses.

Information Provided by the Civilian Provider Questionnaire

- Information about agency services, waiting time, staff size, etc.
- Referral information relative to Navy clients
- Navy client demographics
- Perceptions of salient problems of Navy clients
- Accessibility for Navy clients

Recommended Steps for Collecting Data from Civilian Service Providers

1. Draw up a list of agencies and practitioners providing social services in your vicinity.
2. In most instances, the agency director or deputy director should be the designated respondent.
3. Prepare an introductory cover letter to accompany mailed questionnaires.
4. You will probably wish to telephone those respondents with whom you have previously established a working relationship prior to mailing the questionnaire. Explain the project and solicit cooperation.
5. Mail questionnaires, making sure to include the postage-paid return envelope.
6. Follow-up calls to those who fail to return the questionnaire within the designated time are a good idea and will increase your response rate.
7. Code collected data as indicated in your Codebook (see Appendix A).

INTERVIEW PROTOCOL FOR COMMANDING OFFICERS

Description

For the commanding officer group, data collection changes from a paper-and-pencil approach to a face-to-face interview. Unlike many interviews, this one is highly structured to facilitate coding of core information, although you may also wish to encourage and note additional comments. Statements presented in capital letters are instructions to the interviewer and should not be read aloud.

In addition to the data from commanding officers of selected commands, equivalent data should be collected from (1) department and/or division heads within the commands and (2) master chief petty officers of the commands. Your personnel resources may be insufficient to conduct interviews with all these people. However, with few changes, the interview protocol can be modified for use as a mailed-in questionnaire. Following the commanding officer protocol there is an example of the mailed version for division officers.

Data from the command subgroups indicated above will not be collected until after the interview with the commanding officer. During the interview, it is suggested that you obtain a list of the other officers to be contacted by mail, or the questionnaires can be left with the commanding officer for distribution to others in his command. Also at that time, you will wish to leave with the commanding officer the Command Statistics Summary form which he, or someone that he designates, will complete and return by mail. This form, which is shown at the end of this section, is an essential part of the evaluation process, and its importance should be stressed when speaking with the commanding officers.

Information Provided by the Interview Protocol for Commanding Officers

- Officers' perception of and involvement with personal problems of service members and families
- Their assessment of the effects of such problems
- Relative contribution of Navy-related stressors to problems experienced by service members and families
- Perceived barriers to the use of Family Service Centers
- Importance of various social and support services

Recommended Steps for Collecting Data from Commanding Officers

1. Prepare your list of respondents.
2. Set up an interview schedule. Don't rush--allow yourself time between interviews for getting from one office to another and for cleaning up any notes you have taken.
3. Do practice the interview so you can deliver the questions in a manner that is natural for you. So long as you retain the structure of the items and response items, no harm will be done if you modify the wording of an introduction or compose your own transitional statements between items.

4. Prepare a 5- x 7-inch card to be handed to respondents prior to Item 2. This helps to keep the options firmly in front of the commanding officer while the next items are answered.

5. Leave questionnaires for other command members with the commanding officer for distribution, or prepare for mailing. Either way, don't forget to attach return envelopes to the questionnaires.

6. Collect data and code as indicated in your Codebook (see Appendix A).

NAVY FAMILY SERVICE CENTERS
Interview Protocol for Commanding Officer

We have sought an interview today to ask you to help evaluate the effectiveness of this Family Service Center after our first _____ years of coordinating support services for Navy people. We are also interested in hearing your ideas about the typical problems encountered by Navy personnel and their families and the services required to address those problems. You are in a position to provide a unique perspective on these matters.

1. Estimate the average number of hours you personally spend each week dealing with the problems of individuals in your command.

CAREER COUNSELOR QUESTIONNAIRE

Description

This questionnaire is similar to others in the package except that it is designed to take advantage of the unique perspective of career counselors. While retaining some of the same item content, it also introduces new kinds of information. Item 5 is an open-ended item which will require special coding; other items are the familiar "choose one" variety.

Information Provided by the Career Counselor Questionnaire

- Importance of family issues in reenlistment decisions
- Impact of various issues on reenlistment
- Participation of member spouse
- Referral patterns
- Relative importance of services to Navy members and families
- Evaluation of Family Service Center contribution in the provision of services

Recommended Steps for Collecting Data from Career Counselors

1. Prepare the list of career counselors.
2. Prepare transmittal letter.
3. Mail questionnaires.
4. Follow with telephone contact for those who don't respond within time allowed.
5. Code questionnaire data, referring to your Codebook (see Appendix A).

INTERVIEW PROTOCOL FOR STATION OR BASE COMMANDING OFFICER

Description

You will want to conduct a personal interview with the commanding officer of your base, similar to those you have had with commanding officers of various operational commands stationed there. Core items are again organized in a structured format, and many items repeat questions found on other instruments in the package. Since the structured portion of the interview has been kept quite brief, you will be able to add a few items specific to your individual Center without exceeding an appropriate time requirement.

Information Provided by the Station or Base Commanding Officer Interview

- Perception of problems experienced by Navy personnel and their families at this location
- Assessment of impact and frequency ranking of problems
- Relative contribution of Navy-related stressors to problems experienced by service members and families at this location
- Perceived impact of Family Service Center on delivery of services
- Perceived barriers to use of Family Service Center
- Importance of various social and support services

Recommended Steps for Collecting Data from Base Commanders

1. Make appointment for interview.
2. Rehearse what you will say.
3. Be sure you have the card that is used in Items 1 through 3.
4. Collect data and code as indicated (see Appendix A).

NAVY FAMILY SERVICE CENTERS
Program Evaluation Protocol for Station or Base
Commanding Officers

(SUGGESTED INTRODUCTION)

Your evaluation of the effectiveness of the Family Service Center in its first _____ years of operation is needed to complete our assessment and evaluation process. As part of this effort, we have interviewed commanding officers of the various operational commands stationed here. However, you are in a unique position to talk about special needs associated with this base and its environmental aspects as opposed to the perspective of a particular command or group. I have only a few structured questions, but any comments you would like to add are welcome.

On this card is a list of some of the psychosocial problems that may be experienced by Navy personnel and/or their dependents. (HAND RESPONDENT THE CARD FOR REFERENCE DURING THE NEXT FEW QUESTIONS.)

- A. Alcohol/drug abuse
- B. Family violence
- C. Marital discord/relationship problems
- D. Depression
- E. Job performance difficulties
- F. Anxiety
- G. Somatic difficulties
- H. Loneliness and isolation
- I. Parent-child relationship problems

1. Referring to the list, which of those problems or behaviors would you consider to be most prevalent at this location?

_____ most prevalent
_____ next _____ third

2. Have we left any problems off the list that you would like to mention?
(WRITE IN ANY ADDITIONAL PROBLEMS MENTIONED BY RESPONDENT.)

3. Which of the problems do you believe has the most serious impact on morale and performance?

4. Now I would like to discuss some sources of stress that might be associated with a specific duty site. As I read through the list, please tell me if you consider each one to be a serious problem, somewhat of a problem, or no problem at all for family members and Navy personnel stationed here. (RATE EACH SOURCE OF STRESS.)

	Serious Problem	Somewhat of a Problem	No Problem
Inadequate or substandard housing	_____	_____	_____
Difficult climatic conditions	_____	_____	_____
High cost of living	_____	_____	_____
Lack of transportation	_____	_____	_____
Overcrowded or poor schools	_____	_____	_____
Few recreational facilities	_____	_____	_____
Intercultural adjustments/conflicts	_____	_____	_____
"Dangerous Duty"	_____	_____	_____
Limited employment opportunities for spouse	_____	_____	_____

5. Would you say that implementation of the Family Service Center at this facility has had considerable impact, little impact, or no impact on the utilization of support services? (CHECK ONE.)

_____ has had considerable impact _____ has had little impact _____ has had no impact

6. What are some of the barriers or constraints which keep people from seeking help through the Family Service Center? (CHECK ALL THAT ARE MENTIONED.)

_____ never heard of the Family Service Center _____ concerned about confidentiality _____ confused about the purpose of the Family Service Center or available services
 _____ location inconvenient/transportation problem _____ parents with no provision for child care _____ spouse objections to seeking help _____ negative feelings as a result of previous encounters _____ other. PLEASE SPECIFY _____

7. Do you have any suggestions for increasing the visibility of the Family Service Center?

☐ No
☐ Yes Suggestions: _____

8. Please help us rank the importance of a number of social services, treatment programs and other types of assistance. As I read through this list, tell me if you consider each one to be very important, somewhat important, or not important for the well-being of Navy people and their families.

	Not Important	Somewhat Important	Very Important
Legal counseling	_____	_____	_____
Marital/family counseling	_____	_____	_____
Personal counseling	_____	_____	_____
Information and referral	_____	_____	_____
Drug and alcohol treatment programs	_____	_____	_____
Medical services	_____	_____	_____
Child care	_____	_____	_____
Deployment support and information	_____	_____	_____
Financial education and counseling	_____	_____	_____
Children's protective services	_____	_____	_____
Housing referral services	_____	_____	_____
Career counseling	_____	_____	_____
Employment assistance for family members	_____	_____	_____
Relocation information, orientation	_____	_____	_____
Religious and pastoral counseling	_____	_____	_____
Youth and family recreation programs	_____	_____	_____
Health education programs	_____	_____	_____
Singles social programs	_____	_____	_____
Parenting education	_____	_____	_____
Transportation services	_____	_____	_____
Assistance with home or auto repairs	_____	_____	_____
Stress management programs	_____	_____	_____
Marriage enrichment programs	_____	_____	_____
Overseas Duty Support Program	_____	_____	_____
Ombudsman training	_____	_____	_____
"Special needs" referrals	_____	_____	_____

9. In general, would you like to see Navy people make more use of civilian and community support services?

☐ no
☐ no opinion
☐ yes

10. What ONE additional social service do you feel would make the greatest contribution in support of Navy people and their families at this base?

IMPLEMENTING THE EVALUATION PLAN

DIRECTOR'S CHECKLIST

This section presents the sequential steps required to carry out the evaluation so that tasks can be assigned to appropriate professional or clerical staff and/or volunteers. In actual practice, there will be some time overlap among the steps. This works to your advantage, because several tasks can be in progress at the same time at various levels of responsibility.

1. Select the commands for participation:
 - List all commands based within your catchment area.
 - Classify commands by function, size, etc.
 - Select any that are unique, then add at least one command from each group of commands that are similar, a command that is typical of its category.
2. Contact commanding officers of selected commands:
 - Discuss the purpose and extent of the evaluation project; solicit cooperation and permission to contact command members.
 - Request access to the command roster and member addresses.
 - Set up an appointment for the commanding officer interview.
3. Draw the sample:
 - Draw the random sample from the combined rosters of participating commands (see "Recommended Steps for Collecting Data from Navy Populations," in Service Member Questionnaire section).
 - Compile a list of military and civilian providers and their addresses.
 - Compile the list of division officers, master chief petty officers (MCPOs), and career counselors from participating commands.
4. Compose cover letters to accompany mail questionnaires for the following subgroups:
 - Navy service members
 - Military providers
 - Division officers
 - MCPOs
 - Career counselors
 - Civilian providers
5. Assemble and prepare materials:
 - Obtain sufficient op-scan questionnaires for your sample.
 - Copy or have other instruments and cover letters printed.
 - Address mailing labels or envelopes.
 - Print self-addressed return envelopes.

6. Collect data:
 - Send out mail questionnaires.
 - Conduct interviews.

7. Arrange to have data coded:

This process involves translation of responses into a numeric "code." Appropriate values for each response have been set forth in the codebooks contained in Appendix A. This task can be done by clerical staff or volunteers after a brief training session.

8. Input data.
9. Analyze data.

Steps 8 and 9 are discussed in detail in the following section, Notes for the Computer Analyst.

NOTES FOR THE COMPUTER ANALYST

This section is presented for the many readers who are computer-smart but relatively inexperienced in survey research. The experienced statistical analyst, with an understanding of how the analysis tasks should be approached, will find this section is redundant.

Statistical Software

Analysis of the data collected for the evaluation will require a statistical software package, that is, a computer program to perform conventional statistical procedures on your data. Many of these not only perform the requested procedures but also guide the inexperienced user through the steps involved in running the program.

Possibly the best known statistical software, in common use at many universities and research laboratories, is the Statistical Package for the Social Sciences (SPSS). An advantage of this software is that it is supported by comprehensive documentation, which includes two Statistical Guides in addition to the User Manual. A version of SPSS is also available for the personal computer user. However, SPSS is by no means the only choice you have. In Appendix B you will find a list of some of the other packages you might choose, along with the name and address of the publisher. The customer representative for your computer hardware should be able to offer advice and recommendations to assist you in this decision.

Coding and Data Input

The time-consuming step of coding questionnaire responses into numeric values has been minimized by using an optically scanned format for surveying the largest subpopulation involved in the evaluation (service members). The completed forms will be mailed directly to NMPC-66 in Washington, DC (or to the contractor), which will in turn provide FSCs with processed data.

To further simplify the coding process, codebooks are included as Appendix A to this manual. Scrupulous adherence to established codes will allow data from all FSCs to be aggregated at the program level. Further, column fields are designated so that subgroups can be combined in the analysis for selected items. For these reasons, it is important that common coding strategies be used throughout the FSC community. This strategy is facilitated by the use of structured response formats--that is, the respondent must choose from a limited number of structured responses rather than answer in his or her own words. For the few items where additional comments are appropriate, it is suggested that comments be compiled and analyzed separately from the coded data.

Because responses of the largest subgroup are input via an optical scanner, it becomes feasible to enter data from smaller subgroups from the computer terminal. Experienced key-entry personnel often work directly from the coded questionnaires. However, many less experienced personnel find it easier to enter the numeric codes on a keypunch worksheet first, and then work at the terminal. An alternative is to engage one of the many key-entry services to prepare a data tape or disk to be read by your computer.

Analysis Strategies

The analysis of survey data should be guided by the twin goals of description and explanation. There are both simple and elaborate techniques for achieving each of these goals. For purposes of this evaluation and needs assessment plan, it is recommended that individual FSCs concerned with local data restrict their efforts to the simple techniques. More complex analyses can then be conducted at the program level with the aid of a statistical consultant. A great deal of useful information can be gained from the simple techniques to be discussed here.

The data obtained from the combined questionnaires can be used to address a number of different questions, including all those shown in Table 5. NMPC-66 will have specific questions they wish to answer and will perform their own analysis for the aggregated data. At the local level, there is room for some individuality in analysis procedures. It is a good idea to begin your analysis by formulating research questions. Be as specific as you can in stating the questions. Write them down and use them as a guide in determining how individual variables will be analyzed. The questions that have been listed here are to get you started, and many more are sure to occur to you as you become more familiar with the data.

Plan to begin your analysis by measuring what was said, that is, by getting a count of response options to individual items. This is done by examining one item or variable at a time with "frequency distributions" produced by the statistical software. A frequency distribution is simply a table indicating how frequently each option was chosen. Results are presented both as raw numbers and as percentages. Figures 3 and 4 are the annotated output from typical frequency distribution procedures using the SPSS software. These examples are based on items from the 1985 Navy Support Services Survey (Soriano, Sander, & Glaser, 1986). In the first, respondents answered the question "How important is it for you and your dependents to have available a Navy service center that offers information and referral, counseling, and educational classes?" The second example presents results from the question "Do you intend to make the Navy your career?"

Using the same examples, let us consider how you might explore the associations between variables or characteristics. No doubt you will want to know more than what was said, you will also want to know who said it. For example, you might wish to know the marital status of the individuals who answered "very important" to the question in Figures 3 and 4. If single Navy members answer the question one way and married members answer it another, you learn something quite different than if the responses are evenly distributed among all marital-status groups. Most often, the purpose of subgroup descriptions is comparative. Thus, such two-variable tables show the frequency of one variable by the categories of another. In the above example, one might assume that the importance of a Center would vary for different family-status groups.

Table 5. Some Examples of Research Questions to be Addressed with Evaluation Data

How important are each of the services listed, in the opinion of the Navy members in your sample?

Which is the most important?
Which is the least important?

In the opinion of commanding officers and division officers, which services are the most important and which are least important?

How do providers--both military and civilian--rate the importance of various services?

Are civilian and military providers in agreement about importance of services?

Which services are most important to Navy families?

Which services are most important to Navy members who are single?

Are the services judged to be most important by Navy members also the services that are used most frequently?

Which services are used most frequently by Navy families?

by Navy single members?

Are there differences in utilization of services by commands?

What do Navy members consider to be the most serious problems or stresses?

Do commanding officers and providers agree with the Navy members about the most serious problems or stresses?

Do civilian and military providers agree on the matter of which problems are most serious?

Are the services used most frequently those intended to address the problems judged to be most serious?

In general, how satisfied are users with the services they have received?

Which services have the highest satisfied user scores? Which have the lowest?

Is there a difference in satisfaction by family status?

What type of services are furnished most frequently by civilian providers?

What referral patterns bring Navy clients to civilian agencies?

Do civilian providers see more Navy personnel or more Navy family members?

How much time must command officers devote to dealing with personal problems of command members?

Do commands whose members make more frequent use of support services appear to have fewer problems as reflected by statistical indicators?

Which problems have the most serious impact on job performance, in the opinion of commanding officers?

What problems do career counselors see as having the greatest impact on reenlistment decisions?
